Death plagues Kurds despite international help efforts

Refugee camps are medical nightmare

UZUMLU, Turkey — Scores of Iraqi refugees are dying every day at this makeshift camp on the Turkish-Iraqi border, with cold and diarrhea devastating people who trekked for days to evade feared reprisals by Saddam Hussein's forces, a doctor said Wednesday.

"In two or three days, thousands of children will die of gastroenteritis (diarrhea) and pneumonia," predicted Maj. Sadi Sadeq al-Maruyyati, an Iraqi army doctor with the refugees.

He was the only doctor at the Uzumlu refugee camp 35 miles west of Cukurca, where about 100,000 refugees have taken shelter the past 10 days.

Hundreds more were reaching the remote area each day. In Geneva, the International Red Cross appealed Wednesday for more funds to help Iranian and Turkish relief agencies cope with the ever-swelling numbers of desperate Iraqi refugees.

The League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies said $32 million was urgently needed to buy food, tents and other supplies.

At the Uzumlu camp, al-Maruyyati said about 1,000 adult refugees had succumbed to cold and disease since their arrival and 20 children were dying

He said children and adults with diarrhea had no hope of being treated at the camp because most were in the final stages of dehydration and needed intravenous fluids and serum at hospitals.

Tap water might be safer than bottled

WASHINGTON — Plain tap water may be safer than some pricey bottled waters because of lax federal regulation of the bottled-water industry, congressional investigators and lawmakers said Wednesday.

The General Accounting Office, the congressional watchdog agency, concluded the Food and Drug Administration needs to do more to ensure bottled waters are safe.

Inadequate regulations mean "bottled water, including mineral water, may contain levels of potentially harmful contaminants that are not allowed in public drinking water," the report said.

John W. Harman, director of the GAO's food and agriculture issues, told a House panel it was "difficult to make assurances" that bottled waters are safe or unsafe because the industry is not scrutinized well enough.

The GAO conducted its investigation at the request of Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of a House Energy and Commerce subcommittee. The FDA has been "inexcusably negligent" regarding its duty, he said.

NEW YORK — New religions and immigration from the Far East and Arab world have barely dented the overwhelmingly Christian composition of the U.S. population, a 13-month survey of 113,000 adults has found.

Study director Barry Kosmin of the City University of New York Graduate School called the findings the most extensive religious profile available of 20th century America.

The survey found 86.5 percent of Americans identified with Christian denominations, including 26 percent Roman Catholic and 60 percent Protestant. Only 2 percent refused to reveal their religious identification, and only 7.5 percent said they had no religion.

Richard John Neuhaus, editor in chief of First Things, a monthly journal on religion and public life, said it should come as no surprise that Americans are so pervasively religious.

Neuhaus said the one surprise for him in reading about the survey was the researcher's conclusion, after accounting for language barriers in the poll, that Muslims represent 0.5 percent of the U.S. population, or 1.4 million Ameri-

Byelorussian workers protest low wages

MINSK, U.S.S.R. — More than 100,000 workers defied an appeal from Mikhail S. Gorbachev for a moratorium on protests, pouring out of factories Wednesday in the Byelorussian capital to strike for higher pay. "The Communist Party Drove Us Here!" read one placard held by workers marching in a light rain to Minsk's central Lenin Square. "Put Food from Chernobyl on the Government Table," read another sign. "The people are waking up!" Sergei Klyuchko, a miner from Donetsk in the neighboring Ukraine, told the estimated 40,000 workers and others packed into the square at midday. The walkout ignored an impassioned plea from Gorbachev on national television Tuesday for an end to strikes and demonstrations.

"Everything is a mess in Byelorussia, which until recently seemed so stable, sensible and reliable. "Now passions are red hot," the Communist Party newspaper Pravda commented Wednesday.

Californians face $13 billion deficit

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — An unparalleled $13 billion budget deficit over two years, with roots in the Proposition 13 tax rebellion, means residents of the nation's most populous state will soon be paying more for less.

"We could close all our state universities, we could open all our prisons, we could eliminate our entire state workforce — and we would still not close this gap," Gov. Pete Wilson said.

The projected shortfall is the largest ever faced by any state, according to the Department of Finance.

Californians could be paying higher sales taxes, higher liquor and motor vehicle taxes and higher college tuition. One proposal would tax services such as those provided by attorneys, architects and plumbers.

Public schools and colleges will likely have larger classes and fewer courses, teachers and state workers could lose their jobs, and fewer health, mental health and welfare programs will be available for the poor. Determining what taxes to raise and what services to cut presents a daunting problem.

If royal mummies in Egypt, ancient Mayan crafts and the interaction of primeval cultures interest you, this is the week you've been waiting for. Archaeology Week kicked off Wednesday and will extend until Saturday. All events are free and open to the public. The activities began Wednesday with a speech by C. Wilfred Griggs, a professor of ancient scripture. He spoke on recent excavations in Egypt, where he and his team discovered the mummy of an Egyptian high priest's daughter in a tomb that, unusually, had not been previously dis-

He also spoke about a more than 5,000-year-old pyramid discovered by BYU excavators.

Donald W. Forsyth, professor of anthropology, will speak on "New Perspectives on the Maya" Friday at 7 p.m. at the Bean Museum. Forsyth, who spent six months last winter in Guatemala, will discuss updated views, significantly changed because of research, of the primitive Maya.

"Before, we could only read dates. Now translation of text is beginning to emerge, and we are seeing a people that socially were very highly organized," Forsyth said.

"We now know of historical events and certain people within the Mayan culture."

On Saturday, Joel Janetski, director of the Museum of Peoples and Cultures, will give demonstrations of primitive Mayan crafts from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. The demonstrations will include flint-knapping, fire-making by friction, hide tanning, corn-grinding and basketry. The demonstrations will be at the Museum of Peoples and Cultures, located at 700 N. 100 East.

Films reflect personal ideas

Student aims for directing success

Editor's note: The following is the first of a three part series about film phy that many film students feel. "In students at BYU.

By RUSSELL T. TAYLOR Universe Staff Writer

In 1990, less than 5 percent of all the movie directors in the United States were female. Susan Bernhardt, a graduate student at BYU, is out to make that percentage a little Bernhardt knows the road ahead of her is long and hard. Students in the Theatre and Film Department are told from the beginning that the movie business is not secure, even less so for women who want to direct.

Bernhardt plans on being a cinematographer and working on small individual films when she graduates in December.

"In documentaries, you have more control of the project because you usually produce and direct the film yourself," she said.

"What makes a film great is the artist being able to express an idea within themselves to the world, so the audience can use it to help them with their lives."

Bernhardt is now working on an experimental art film called "Distant Fields." The final product will be about 12 minutes long and will have cost more than $5,000.

Like many students in the department, the lack of funds has slowed Bernhardt's project down. The filming began in August, and final editing will be completed in the next couple of weeks.

"I did a lot of corner cutting to get the project's costs down," Bernhardt said. "This is a very unusual film for a BYU student because it is so experimental."

There is no dialogue in the film, and the footage is highlighted by unique visual images while the story is told by sound effects only.

The film is centered around a 10year-old boy and girl who are shown running through a meadow. Abrupt changes done by editing show the boy at the age of 16 running through the same meadow as the film moves on.

"You get to see the boy change into a man and then he is suddenly in a city surrounded by tall buildings. The girl returns to the story near the end of the film," Bernhardt said.

"I don't want to give away the ending, but it is not one that you would expect," she said.

Bernhardt is in favor of artists expressing themselves in their work. "I really believe in the Autuel Theory, which stresses that the director has a certain style in his or her films and their hand can be felt throughout the whole production," she said.

"It feels good to be able to discuss our Mormon beliefs in class," Bernhardt said. "I believe that films should have morals in the storyline. Even fictional movies tend to have some aspect of truth to them."

Film students have to balance time between hands-on work experience and studying for classes. Working on internships and individual projects gives film majors a chance to experience the real world.

Students have the opportunity to develop a style of their own and know why they have to do certain things, Bernhardt said.

"One of the most important things, I have learned at BYU is what other directors have experienced in their lives," she said. "We have the opportunity to see the way they direct, how they develop ideas and why they direct the way they do."

Consider revamping religion curriculum

The current religious education program at BYU tends to lump all students into the same generic category of abilities, with very little consideration of the specific strengths and weaknesses of individuals. It may well be time for some changes in the program, adding more flexibility and preparing a way for students on all levels to expand their knowledge of religion, rather than simply engaging in university sponsored scripture study.

In other areas, including English, math, science and foreign languages, the university offers examinations for credit. Students able to pass off college requirements in this way can cut the time required for them to get their degrees. They also avoid having to sit through a class covering material they might already know. These testing programs make a lot of sense.

Students enter the university to learn, and shouldn't have to start with what they already know.

According to the Department of Religious Studies, religion classes are not there to see that students achieve any minimum degree of knowledge of the scriptures, as might be demonstrated by passing an exam, but rather to ensure regular scripture study. For this reason no exams for religious credit are offered, as in other areas of the system. Additionally, students can count no more than two religion classes per semester toward the university requirement, forcing them to spread out their religion studies.

Therefore, if 14 hours of religion are required to guarantee sufficient scripture study, it seems that both the needs of students and expectations of the university could better be served if there were a little more flexibility in the religion program. A greater variety of classes on different levels should be offered so that students with varying degrees of religious knowledge can make the best use of time spent in religion classes. Granted, Book of Mormon classes do separate returned missionaries from those who haven't served. But, it shouldn't stop there, and it shouldn't take missionary service as the only factor in determining one's level of religious awareness — especially since missionary service is no guarantee of advanced scriptural knowledge or spirituality. And those who do make great gains may still be on varying levels.

Many students learn a great deal about the scriptures through years of Sunday school, primary and seminary. Others don't - even after having served a mission. For some students the required religion classes are just a rehash of what they might already know. An examination system would seem to be a better predictor of knowledge level.

Required religion classes tend to be large, slower paced and often boring when compared to elective classes. If students can't avoid taking 14 credits of religion at BYU, they should at least be given the option of testing out of some of the boring basic courses and spend their 14 hours either in more advanced classes on a given subject, or in other elective classes on religious subjects they may not know so well.

Admittedly, such a program would require more resources for the religion program, but wouldn't the increased ability of the program to provide students with a more meaningful education in the area of religious studies be worth it? Ideally those who could demonstrate enough knowledge through examinations in certain areas would be allowed to trim the total number of credits allowed, and be trusted to continue studying on their own. After all, those who could demonstrate such knowledge probably have developed regular study habits over a number of years anyway. In this way, maybe some of the costs could be held down, since it would reduce the number of classes necessary to accommodate all the students. It would also help students graduate on time — a benefit for both the university and the students. But even if the university insists on 14 hours for all, increased program flexibility and variety is still worthy of consider-

Try talking

Recently letters of complaint have been published in the Universe regarding unreasonable cleaning checks that have occurred and are occurring at the Riviera and Glenwood apartments. I want to share my experience with respect to this subject.

I live at Raintree apartments which is also owned by David Freeman and I've enjoyed nothing but positive experiences with our cleaning checks. the kind lady that visits our apartment each month has been very reasonable. She is courteous, patient, and only "puts on the white glove" when the dirt is visibly noticeable.

During this past month's inspection, my roommate arrived home from school late and couldn't finish his job before the designated time. He usually has his job finished and she knew that. She kindly allowed him three more hours to finish his assignment and then she would return to inspect — at no charge.

I realize that not everyone's experience has been the same and I believe that many inspections are truly unreasonable. Maybe the problems could be resolved if we will speak with our cleaning inspectors in an effort to understand each other, instead of directing our complaints to Dave Freeman and his associates.

Mind own parking

To the Editor:

I did not realize that it was necessary to get the approval of students who use the Tanner Building parking lot before parking in the handicapped parking spots. After all, the state of Utah felt that my disabilities were severe enough to issue a handicap parking permit to me - somehow (silly me) I thought that was the only requirement I had to meet.

I lost my hip and most of my knee in Ruel Haymond a car accident when I was 16. Since then, I have been through years of therapy in order to walk correctly. I have a slight limp, and every step I take leads me one step closer to another hip surgery.

Since I do not look like what most people think a disabled person should look like, students take it upon themselves to comment about my choice of parking spots. I have heard everything from "There's another mentally handicapped person parking in the handicapped spots" to "Excuse me, but are you a cripple?". Last week,

No BYU support

To the Editor:

I write this letter as the outgoing president of the Samuel Hall Society Goldbrickers, an off-campus fraternity. First, I would like to thank the people who helped to make our "Band Jams '91" a great success. This includes the off-campus businesses and organizations who donated material goods, the five bands for showing us a good time and all those who attended. Although we had many of the usual problems inherent in an event of this nature, everyone involved helped us solve the problems, and ultimately contribute a significant amount of money to several local families whose husbands and fathers are still in the Gulf region.

If I list the organizations that supported us in our efforts, you would notice the absence of any group affiliated with BYU. This is because BYU, instead of supporting us, actually harassed the club and its members. We received nothing more beneficial than a token "sounds great." Although President Lee was gracious enough to see us, those with his delegated authority proved they are more concerned with rumor and image than fact and substance.

As I have dealt with the university about Samuel Hall's off-campus status and events such as "Band Jams," I have spoken with people at every level of the administration, from the very bottom to the very top. Rezoning gets commission's recommedation

By REBECCA INMAN Universe Staff Writer

The rezoning of four acres and a preliminary plan for a Community Shopping Center have been approved by the Provo City Planning Commission. These items will be moved to the City Council Consent agenda for a vote at the regular meeting on April 16 to finalize a decision.

The request for the new zoning was made by Gardner/Deschamps, agents for Property Reserve, Inc (PRI).

The four acres of property at 4800 N. Edgewood Drive on the side of Veterans Memorial Park, was previously zoned as residential agricultural. "The four acres together with property already zoned for commercial use will equal around 17 acres for a Community Shopping Center," Dave Gardner of PRI said.

At a public hearing Wednesday night, a resident of the affected area, Boyd Rollins, spoke in opposition of the re-zoning. "We — some of my neighbors and I — would like the request for zoning be denied,"he said.

Another affected resident, Frank Thompson said, "Being a younger homeowner, I'm concerned with the future of the neighborhood. I'd like the area to remain residential." Thompson also said he was concerned with the architecture. "If the area is re-zoned I'd like to see the architecture remain compatible with the surrounding area." The preliminary plans for the com-

BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY

Why Janet Clegg took Independent Study:

I was first introduced to the Independent Study program when I was away from BYU. It allowed me to continue my education while I was living away from the university. I enjoyed the courses and being able to work at my own pace. I have also taken several courses while enrolled at BYU. They have helped me complete needed courses which didn't fit into my schedule. It's a great way to learn.

Our program offers you:
